The European Studies Program presents

The Current Refugee Crisis in Europe
A Faculty Roundtable Discussion on Europe’s Humanitarian Challenge

Tuesday
November 10th, 7 PM
Gore Hall 116

Over the last five years, the Syrian civil war and the advance of ISIS have driven millions from their homes. Throughout the Middle East and northern Africa, millions are on the move and seek refuge. The surge of migrants and refugees toward Europe is unprecedented, and there is no end in sight. But the European Union’s response to this humanitarian crisis remains divided; the ideological fissures have never been greater.

A panel of distinguished UD faculty presents the crisis’s historical contexts and the reception of Europeans toward the migrants, addressing the reverberations and consequences of this tragedy. Please join us for an insightful discussion.

Panelists:
Daniel Kinderman, Assistant Professor, Political Science & International Relations
Rudi Matthee, John and Dorothy Munroe Distinguished Professor of History
Mark Miller, Emma Smith Morris Professor, Political Science & International Relations
Monika Shafi, Elias Ahuja Professor of German

Moderator:
James Brophy, Francis H. Squire Professor of History and Director of European Studies

Co-sponsored by the Departments of Political Science & International Relations; History; Languages, Literatures & Cultures; Women & Gender Studies; and Anthropology

309 McKinly Lab
64 E. Delaware Avenue
Newark, DE 19716
302-831-3202